Frequently Asked Questions

Do I need a Handgun Qualification License (HQL) in order to purchase a lower receiver?

No, a lower receiver of a banned assault long gun is classified by the State as a "firearm," but not a "handgun". A Handgun Qualification License (HQL) is only needed if you are purchasing a handgun that is not classified as a curio and relic.

May I build my lower receiver purchased at any time into a handgun?

Yes, a lower receiver of a banned assault long gun may be manufactured provided there is compliance with federal and other state laws—into a handgun.

May I build my lower receiver purchased after 10/1/2013 into an assault long gun?

No, a lower receiver of a banned assault long gun purchased after 10/1/2013 may be built—provided there is compliance with federal and other state laws—only into a handgun, a short barreled rifle that has an overall length of 29 inches or greater, or if the lower receiver is an AR15 platform, into a heavy barrel model.

Who will be responsible for fingerprinting applicants?

The Department of Public Safety and Correctional Services. Please refer to the Public Safety and Correctional Services website for fingerprinting details and locations click HERE.

What is a habitual user?

Habitual user is a person who has been found guilty of two controlled dangerous substance crimes, one of which occurred in the past 5 years.

What is a habitual drunkard?

Habitual drunkard is a person who has been found guilty of any three crimes under § 21-902(a), (b), or (c) of the Transportation Article, one of which occurred in the past year.

Will I need to obtain a Handgun Qualification License in order to purchase a regulated firearm?

Yes. Please see the Handgun Qualification License page for more information.

Can you check my record prior to filling out the paperwork for a regulated firearm?

No, Maryland law does not allow the Maryland State Police to access your criminal record without first having an application on file.

The Maryland State Police recently confirmed my eligibility and I purchased a handgun last month. Why am I on review again?

Even though you have recently purchased a handgun legally, a background check is still required. MSP must ensure that since the time of your purchase you have not been served a protective order, or been arrested, convicted of a disqualifying crime, or placed on supervised probation, etc.

Can I complete an additional application for the purchase of a regulated firearm even though I am currently waiting for my previous application to be approved?

A person may not purchase more than one regulated firearm in a 30-Day period. You may complete more than one application within 30 days, however you may not transfer or take possession of more than one firearm within the 30 day period. Exceptions to this rule are listed on the Regulated Firearms Collector page.

Why am I placed on review?

If there are any discrepancies discovered on the 77R application and/or during any records checks, the application will be placed on hold pending further review by a Maryland State Trooper to ensure the applicant is not prohibited from possessing a regulated firearm.

How do I check the status of my 77R application?
